Dear Laurence

The Multi Modal Interview uses behavioural markers around verbal communications. The interviewer will gather evidence from the interview around these markers to score your verbal communication during the interview. These behavioural markers are specific to the train driver role and so are not compared to interviews for other safety critical roles.

Adjustments and support for any of the train driver psychometric assessments are determined on a case by case basis. This is the responsibility of the employer and assessment centre. The employer should have a policy setting out how adjustments and support will be determined.

Kind regards
